

After moving from the United Kingdom to the United States at a young age, Jordyn experienced a personal struggle in understanding how to connect with others. But it was learning how to communicate with people that inspired her journey to becoming a visual communicator.

She started drawing in high school, which helped her graduate with an International Baccalaureate degree in 2017. She then receiving her Girl Scout Gold Award in 2018, after developing visual aids for differently-abled children to get accessible types of therapy-based play.

Jordyn went on to pursue a career as a motion designer, majoring in that very industry at the Ringling College of Art and Design. She will receive her Bachelors of Fine Arts in the coming May and plans to work as a VFX artist for television and motion pictures, continuing with her goal to connect with others. She also plans to freelance in a variety of artistic fields in hopes of broadening both her expertise and her portfolio.
